

100days.co

How I'd explain this to a 10-year-old:

They step in and tell the business owner, "You focus on building and improving the product, while they take responsibility for helping people discover it, trust it, and ultimately buy it."

Note: The enclosed boxes indicate brands directly managed by 100days.co, while the surrounding labels represent all the consulting and execution capabilities they deploy to drive growth.

100days.co

Difference between large conventional consulting firms & 100days.co

100Days.co is positioned as an operator-style “digital commerce arm” for consumer brands, built by people who already run a sizeable D2C business themselves, whereas large consulting firms are structurally geared for advice and transformation projects, not for actually owning and running day-to-day D2C P&Ls. That operator DNA, end-to-end execution capability, and incentive alignment is the core moat that is hard for big consulting firms to copy without breaking their own business model and culture.

Difference between conventional agencies & 100days.co

Shantanu critiques traditional agency models where commercial incentives are tied to media spend, creating inherent misalignment as revenue increases irrespective of business profitability.

In contrast, 100Days positions itself as an embedded operating partner rather than a conventional agency. It integrates directly into the business, assumes ownership of the P&L, and drives outcomes with a clear focus on sustainable revenue and profitability.

While specific commercial structures are not publicly disclosed, the firm’s approach indicates a shift toward performance-linked, profit-aligned economics. This model reflects strong alignment of incentives and a “skin-in-the-game” philosophy, differentiating it from both traditional agencies and large consulting firms that typically operate on fee-based engagements.

100days.co

Highlights

Not metric-isolated
(agency problem)

Not detached advisory (consulting problem)

Instead, execution + ownership hybrid

Cost Structure (Why it's profitable)

Their main costs

Creative production

Talent (growth marketers, analysts, designers)

Tech tools and
analytics stack

Leading Points

No inventory risk
(unlike brands)

No heavy capex
like manufacturing

Revenue Share

Fixed Component
(Baseline Retainer)

Variable Component (Performance-Linked Upside)

Strategic Implication

De-risks the client by linking a portion of fees to results.

Upside-leverages the consultant based on value creation

Drives a quasi-operator mindset, closer to ownership than advisory.

@sachinsinghraute

100days.co

Backstory

100Days was not conceived as an agency, but as a solution to a structural gap.

In 2021, an internal consulting unit was established to support investor brands such as Reckitt and Colgate, with a clear mandate to drive growth through ownership-led execution. Operating with full accountability for outcomes, the team applied the same principles used in building their own business.

What began as a focused requirement quickly demonstrated repeatable success. The effectiveness of this model highlighted a broader opportunity beyond internal use.

100Days emerged from this evolution as a dedicated growth partner. Built on execution, aligned incentives, and end-to-end ownership, it was designed to scale businesses with the rigor and responsibility of an internal team.

Note

The company has not issued any official disclosure regarding its shareholder composition. The chart is intended solely for illustrative purposes and is based on directional estimates rather than exact shareholding percentages. The underlying information has been derived from publicly available press releases.

Publicly disclosed press communications

Colgate-Palmolive – Source: Business Standard

Gulf Islamic Investments LLC – Source: IndiaWest

Fireside Ventures – Source: Fireside Ventures Portfolio

Reckitt – Source: ReckittNews

100days.co

Hidden costs reduce business agility

The model may appear asset-light initially, but hidden costs and rigid structures can erode flexibility and increase long-term operating complexity.

How a Brand Can Mitigate Partnership Risks

Retain Strategic Control

- Keep core decisions in-house: positioning, pricing, roadmap, insights, approvals.
- Define clear governance, decision rights, and approval authority.

01

Reduce Dependency Through Internal Capability

- Maintain a lean internal “shadow team” across growth, CRM, operations, and analytics.
- Ensure continuous knowledge transfer through SOPs, playbooks, dashboards, and training.

02

Own Critical Assets and Systems

- Retain ownership of data, accounts, platforms, etc.
- Maintain full access to ad accounts, CRM, analytics, and creative assets.
- Use open, modular platforms to reduce switching costs.

03

Build Exit Flexibility Upfront

- Build in termination rights, transition support, and mandatory asset handover.
- Conduct quarterly reviews to identify capabilities to internalize.

04

